00:35:42 Patricia Brennan-Alpert: Greetings from Nova Scotia
00:36:15 Virpi Lehtinen: Hi from Helsinki
00:58:39 mervi kailo: DID NOT MEAN TO RAISE HAND...
01:06:21 mervi kailo: Dear Gen, you show here why motherhood is indeed the most important issue of our times, Claudia von Wehrhof says the same but referring to alchemical patriarchy as the root of all problems we are now facing 01:11:24 Patricia Brennan-Alpert: Brilliant, profound and fundamental explanation of everything :) Thankyou! Wela'lin!
01:21:25 Patricia Brennan-Alpert: Genevieve Vaughan as you presented and explained Maternal gift economy it clicked in like the last puzzle piece; it is obviously true.
01:36:43 Lucille Eckrich: A question: Pragmatically, how do we move our societies as they are today to be the maternal gift economies they, underneath, are &/or depend upon? Do you think we can and, if so, then must correct/negate the flaws/negatives in our existing monetary system and relations in a way that enables our market exchange relations to be commensurable, enabling us to realize and manifest maternal gift economy among us all, and not only implicitly but explicitly too?

01:36:50 Lucille Eckrich: I do think we can and must, and would love to dialogue with you all sometime about the possibilities. Alas, at this moment, I have another meeting of a group working on that systemic change.

01:41:21 Mary Pierce Brosmer: Robin Wall Kimmerer speaks of "The Grammar of Animacy." A quote from her chapter by that name speaks of sitting with trees and says "After the drumbeat of my mother's heart, this was my first language."

01:49:40 Lia O'Hegarty: It seems to me that humans fare well in small communities which maintain peaceful relations with other communities. Within those communities, the gift economy can flourish. However, we cannot simply "scale up" the intimate, nested nature of community life to accommodate millions, even billions, of people. Therefore, I don't see any 'solution' at the 'large level'. I only see a local solution in the form of groups of people choosing to live in intentional communities with a deep relationship to a place.

01:53:23 Irina Pravet: Thank you for this beautiful poem and gift, Annie! 🙏❤️

01:55:47 Patricia Brennan-Alpert: Yes, Thankyou Annie for this circle of metres :)

01:57:37 Lia O'Hegarty: On the subject of indigenous languages, the Irish Gaelic language was literally beaten out of the Irish people at schools in the nineteenth century. If you look up ('google') "bata scoir" (the Gaelic for "tally stick") you will find plenty of information about this. The poet John Montague has written about this forced transition in his poem "A Grafted Tongue": "An Irish child weeps at school repeating its English. After each mistake The master gouges another mark on the tally stick hung about its neck To grow a second tongue, as harsh a humiliation as twice to be born."

02:04:58 Judith Wouk: Robin Wall Kimmerer's book is Braiding Sweetgrass. Grammar of Animacy is the chapter title.

02:13:31 Annie Finch: Letecia what do YOU think about this question?

02:18:07 patricia berkowitz: maybe a program on TV on social media about this subject. what you are doing now is part of the answer. putting these ideas on media

02:18:42 Annie Finch: question for Gen: in what practical ways might the "maternal" aspect of your work change the current vision of the left?

02:20:37 patricia berkowitz: Also learning and educating ourselves and speaking about this to our friends and family

02:25:31 Patricia Herr: I am so grateful for understanding today that I can contribute to the necessary shifts of human attitudes and behaviour by changing my basic paradigm of using and receiving language – as homo donans – but even more by receiving everyone talking to me as homo donans. I hope I'll even manage when the message towards me might be kind of hurtful and aggressive.... Love, Patricia 02:26:59 Irina Pravet: Thank you all for the gift of your words, ideas, concepts and most of all, love, today! Thank you, kiitos, merci, multumesc, gracias, danke schoen from the bottom of my heart.

02:27:31 Lia O'Hegarty: Thanks to all the wonderful speakers today -- all inspiring us towards the truth of humanity as inter-dependent.

02:27:46 Chele Cheel: Brilliant conversation, ladies! Thank you❤️

02:28:11 Xiola-Kathleen Bromley: Prayers to Tonga.

02:28:25 patricia berkowitz: how can i save the chat

02:28:32 Lois Brassart: ThankYOU all this was a wonderful way to spend my morning

02:28:39 Louise Pare: Moving, moving, moving between the worlds she/he.we bring forth all things from within her body. May it be so. It is so.

02:28:55 Judith Wouk: Click on the three dots to the right of the To line

02:29:06 Judith Wouk: Or you can cut and paste.

02:29:06 Diane: Attendees cannot save the chat but it will be posted on our website. <https://www.maternalgifteconomymovement.org>

02:29:51 Sandra JaiChandra: Thank you SO MUCH!
